Teaching and Research Supervision

Advanced Research Seminar Series

1. Probabilistic Programming Reading Group, University of Oxford, August 2015 — September 2016.
    - Together with Radu Grigore and Siddharth Narayanaswamy, I organised this research seminar series, which aims at creating an active informal forum where researchers from different backgrounds (such as programming languages, machine learning and statistics) get together weekly and discuss about recent advances on probabilistic programming.

2. Machine Learning Lunch, University of Oxford, October 2014 — June 2015.

    - This seminar series was organised by me and colleagues from the Engineering, Statistics, and Computer Science departments at the University of Oxford. It aimed at advancing collaboration between these departments on machine learning and artificial intelligence, by way of informal meetings.

3. Machine Learning Techniques for Program Analysis, University of Oxford, August 2012 — November 2012.

    - I ran this informal research seminar series on the use of machine learning techniques in program analysis. My aim was to study recent research results on this topic, and also to bring together people in the department who shared the same interest. We had a weekly meeting where one volunteer gave a whiteboard presentation on a recent research paper. These meetings were usually attended by 3-4 faculty members, 2-3 postdocs, and 1-2 DPhil students.
